My advice is to start and to start to promote this Odyssey channel on your YouTube page and then you will have, because right now I can give you, after the end of the conversation, I will give you the raw material of the conversation, right? But I am not sure because I am kicked from YouTube since 2018, I believe, and I'm not sure if even the mentioning of the Jews could kick you out of YouTube. Yeah, we can call it, I think, you know, these days, if you mention them, I think you might get censored immediately. So we can call them something else, you know, the special tribe who's running the globalist show or something like that.

Yeah. Okay, okay. You can just call them the Jews or something.

If I say Semites, maybe Semites is also a bad term, I don't know. Yeah, or if you use the Shlomo, we're in trouble as well. So, you know, Shlomo, Shlomo globalist.

I mean, but no, but what we can use is a term that I like to use that is quite neutral, even though if it is a little bit loaded, is the special lobby groups. Special lobby groups. Okay, okay.

Yeah. A special lobby group. Yeah.

We can talk about that because I believe that all here were kicked from YouTube at some point because of the Jews. DoomGuard, I remember DoomGuard lost two or three times his YouTube account. Yeah, way more than that, but yeah.

Way more than that, okay, okay. So I remember your second or third reincarnation, so to say. I don't know, Zygard, do you? Yeah, I just had two strikes on one of my channels there, not to bother, I just cut out YouTube altogether because there was no point in bothering.

When I had an interview with somebody, they just took it down after like six hours. I had 6,000 views, too. I think that Rudolf could start also a Telegram group because a lot of Croatian guys are active and actually I will support the Telegram group because, as I said, I'm pissed of this pro-Russian, pro-Serbian bullshit that is running around.

Basically, when I say pro-Serbian, it's basically Russian trolls that are spamming the chats. They're basically Russian proxies. Now, I don't mean to cut you off, but the reason when I started this, it was mainly that I started commenting on YouTube about this, how to say, this cultural subgroup within the alt-right that is heavily influenced by a pro-Russian stance, which means that they take, naturally take, in every conflict that the Serbs had, they usually side with the Serbs due to this fact.

Then I got a request. Many people started asking me, you should launch a channel and explain it from a different viewpoint and so on, and I did. And yeah, so that got me started in the first place.

So I think it's good to talk about this issue because I was also very surprised about this pro-Russian stance. I mean, to be honest with you, I just don't see Russia as a safe haven for, how to put it this way, ethnocentric Europeans that want to survive. Absolutely.

I mean, there were some normal, what's the term to use, ethnocentric Russians, but a lot of these guys escaped in Ukraine. So yeah, a lot of them escaped there, and Russia right now is flooded by Muslim immigrants. And not only that, it has been, I mean, if you look at since the fall of the Soviet Union, the borders have remained wide open from people from Central Asia, the Caucasus region, and the Russian birth rates are in decline.

Yeah. So if you look at that trajectory, it's not looking good for ethnic Russians. That is one part of the issue.

The second part of the issue is you see also it's going under very much control. You cannot utter certain aspects about the Second World War. You cannot even, if you want to have some kind of an ethnocentric party that looks after the Russian interest, it will immediately be bad.

And then if you look at it on a broader level, on the financial perspective, well, it's equally influenced by certain lobby groups like the United States is. So I just see it as a dead end supporting a greater Russia. Yeah, it's true.

These lobby groups, it looks like they're establishing very strong connections with the Russians. And I kind of agree with your guess, actually, with this conservative American, because the communist elite is still there, but they're still there because the Americans, they didn't prosecute them like at all. I mean, not in Russia, of course, I mean, in the ex-communist bloc countries.

I could quote, I can quote. Well, I agree that the structures are there. However, they're operating under a different banner now.

I don't believe that they want to promote the real socialism and destroy capitalism like my guess keeps repeating. I don't think that that is the issue whatsoever. Furthermore, I would like to add that there are certain oligarchs very connected to Vladimir Putin himself.

I can name two of these who are very influential, Valery Kogan, Mikhail Fridman. Mikhail Fridman is a high finance profile, and he is, and they are hardcore pro-Israelis. And then also the movement of Chabad Lubavitch, who all knows, I believe all of you know about them, and they are also connected very much to Putin and his cadres.

So I just don't see, is he playing a 4D chess game? Well, that's like the argument I would say, well, then I should support Donald J. Trump again. It's just the same. I mean, any thoughts? Any thoughts on this? Well, basically, they're all from the same tribe, so it doesn't really matter where they live geographically or what side they claim to be on politically in terms of their ideology, whether it's so-called communist, socialist, leftist, or capitalist, or orthodox Christianity or atheist.

They're basically the same tribe members in all cases. Very true. Dungard? Yeah, I'm kind of tired of like the political name calling like, oh, they subscribe to this ideology or they know what this means or what that means.

It's like, no, I don't think they really do. I mean, if anybody knew anything about communism in its original form, at least, like Karl Marx was a self-hating racist Jew. I mean, I'm serious.

He was. He didn't like Jews. He said that basically they were the facilitators of the crooked gentry because they were always giving them loans and giving them ideas of how to exploit the population.

Also, he believed that there were certain races that were capable of embracing a revolution and there were other races who were not. So to me, it's like, I mean, political ideologies, they're interesting ideas, maybe. Some of them, not very many of them.

But some of them are interesting ideas, maybe. But it's kind of like they have no substance of their own. Like, they're not a vital force in and of themselves.

So if you don't have an ethnostate or if you don't have an ethnocentric way of evaluating the world, like if you don't understand very hard biological realities, then you really can't explain anything about society. You really can't understand anything about society if you don't understand some basic concepts, some basic ideas of race and what it means, how it manifests the social reality. Also, if you don't understand certain, I mean, culture has something to do with it, certainly.

If you don't understand certain sexual realities or if you don't understand certain educational realities, then you're not going to be able to predict what's going to happen to society. If you don't understand that the current educational model we have is just not beneficial, I'm afraid it's not adequate is the best way I can describe it. If you don't understand that, if you don't understand that we've got to change the way kids are trained to become adults, the way that they're taught and what they are taught to believe.

Also, if you don't understand that sexual activity and sexual roles are important, either the lack of or the abundance of, either way, it has to be managed somehow. If you don't understand that, then I feel like you're effectively a liberal, effectively a progressive. What I mean by that is you're somebody who thinks that it doesn't matter what we do or what we think, it doesn't matter, nothing that we do matters, we're just on this set of train tracks that is called progress.

Social construct, they would say. Exactly. I mean, this is what they are.

They believe that we're on a set of rail tracks. They believe we're on the rails towards progress and nothing can take us off it. And in a certain sense, they're correct.

Like, in a certain way, yes, that's true. We're progressing towards an end and nothing seems to be able to stop the train and nothing is taking us off the, like, we can't divert from that set of rails that we're on. That's the same mentality that Christians have, too, only they have a more, the doom and gloom, you know, it's inevitable, the end times, the Armageddon, the apocalypse type of mentality where they think it's all fatalism, basically.

It's just like a different form of the same fatalistic mentality. Yeah, essentially, it's like a politicized, fatalistic mentality. But yeah, you're correct.

And we talked about this earlier, so I don't know if we need to go over it again. But yeah, everybody essentially has the same belief that the world is on a set of rails, and it has to go a certain way. And inevitably, it has to crash.

Like, it has to become worse and worse and then crash. That's basically what everyone I've encountered believes. Except for the progressives, they think, no, it's getting constantly better.

But then you observe their behavior, and they act as if they actually agree with the religious people or the fundamentalists, because their behavior is intended to provoke those people. And I don't think you could realistically argue that that's not what they're doing, because they just do it in the most heinous way. Like, they do things that no sane person should think that that is reasonable, or that you should publicly behave that way, even if you privately were inclined to be that way.

There's no reason for other people to know about it, or to be concerned with it. But they think that it's important, you know? So essentially, they effectively have the same psychological character of the Jews. They have to be causing trouble constantly.

They just want to make other people mad, so that other people will react a certain way that you naturally should react. But they want to criminalize the reaction. Like, they want to criminalize the reactionaries, and then they want to continue doing heinous things to try and provoke the reactionaries.

So yeah, it's agitation propaganda, is what it's called. It's basically a bunch of statistical control freaks. Yes.

So as far as, like, the... Yeah, I've said this to Nordkram before. I hate talking about Dugan, because as far as I'm concerned, Eurasianism is just a cope. It's a really shitty cope that the Russians have come up with, because they realize that their population is declining.

They've become degenerate before they ever got wealthy. Unlike the West. The West got wealthy first, then degenerated.

But Russia has never really made it to the state of a modern nation. They've never made it to the state. Yeah.

But even though they never made it, they're still degenerating, and they can't figure out that it's their own fucking fault for this communist nonsense. They can't figure out that it's their own fault. Like, when you kill 20 million of your people in a brutal, horrifying fashion, like, yeah, it demoralizes them.

They can't figure that out, that this communist nonsense makes no sense. So the Russian people apparently have no refuge, at least according to the social statistics that I've seen online. They're in horrible shape.

So they need immigration, because they need a population to keep the wheels turning in their barren wasteland of a country. But they're taking that population from the Middle East, which is the dumbest move possible. But they're justifying it under the same butt-fuckitarian, multicultural, slop, muck-muck talk that the liberals here in America are always droning on about.

Well, liberals and conservatives both drone on about it in America. So once again, I can't. Like, once again, there's no difference between the ideologies.

So it's just a bunch of noise. But the Russians are doing the exact same thing. The Russians also want to be America.

So it really doesn't make any sense. Like, none of these conflicts make any sense. Russia versus America? Why are they mad at each other? I guess it just boils down to... Geopolitics, really.

I guess that's it. Geopolitics, yeah. That's basically Russian.

They seek to... I mean, they have allied themselves with the Chinese, which I believe will hurt them in the long run as well. And might even push the Russian into a total unnecessary conflict for geopolitical interest. Yeah.

I mean, it kind of seems like it's just ill-conceived to me, because the end game, no matter what, because the populations are in decline, the populations that created this modern civilization are in decline. They're trying to replace them with barbarous, or maybe that's not the correct word. They're trying to replace them with third world populations and expect the same result, expect a continuation of their civilization as they had it.

Or in the case of the Russians, I mean, they never really had much to begin with. They want to improve it, but it's not going to happen. So, at the end of it, we're just going to end up with a world that is full of a bunch of deracinated, unidentifiable hominids.

And it's not like they're going to keep the industry turning. Like, they're not going to keep the wheels of the industry running, because here in America, I'll tell you what it is from... I'll tell you how America works from what I've seen personally in my life, is that here in the Midwest, there's a lot of small towns with, like, maybe 10,000 people or less in them, but they have factories everywhere. They're full of factories, so there's lots of jobs.

There's lots of jobs for these little lower middle class white towns. And they're all on the highway. They're all on these highway networks, so there's easy transportation for all of the factory goods that are being produced by the white people, the middle class or working class white people, maybe some Mexicans.

Nowadays, there's a lot of Mexicans too. But even so, it's a totally different culture and a totally different social framework than the urban centers where there's a huge population of Blacks and mestizos and Jews also. So all the productive work takes place in the heartland of the country, in the core of the country.

Definitely, that's where all of the grain, the staple grains are produced. I guess we chased off Rudolph because I wasn't letting him talk. In any case, so that's the way it goes in America.

All of the work is done in the core of the country. The cities consume it all, and they produce the quote-unquote culture of the country, which is destroying the country. And also they produce the... Why would they implode? We keep sending them the food.

Basically, the cities produce the social movements of the country that everybody has to participate in, like some new religious festival. So the cities are where the Black crime is happening and where the cops occasionally have to confront the Black criminals, in which case the Black criminals become a martyr. And then this is a social movement that takes control of the whole country and drives everyone mad.

Okay, but that's like their contribution. Maybe there's... Ultimately, in terms of survivalism, the places that are going to survive are those that are self-sufficient and self-sustaining and that are industrial enclaves, like in the Midwest or the Northwest imperative of Richard Butler or Harold Covington. That region is a sustainable one.

I'd like to discuss with Rudolf and Nordlux too about global enclaves of sustainability for white power in the world. And as to America, I think that the Midwest and the Northwest are the best option. Maybe Rudolf will talk a little bit more about that.

Well, I'm very much interested in the socioeconomic consequences of the transition that we're experiencing. I mean, one of the aspects that worries me a lot, especially when it comes to the factories in these smaller cities and so on, is what will happen when jobs will become automated in the future. I mean, it risks, you know, pushing people out.

The system collapses in on itself though, because the notion of automation implies progressivism, that it's going to continue in this so-called upward direction, but it's already going downward in a tailspin. Now it's like, why would it go forward in an automated direction? Well, I mean, if you look at the... I mean, especially during the pandemic and afterwards, the entire economy has been slowly being restructured. So I just see it as... I don't want to sound too pessimistic, but it seems like inevitable that we're heading toward that direction.

And that means, of course, a higher degree of digitalization, automization and so on. So, but yeah, I mean, it depends naturally from industry to industry, but that's the trend currently right now. Well, I don't know about you guys, but I've never met a machine that wasn't a glitchy piece of shit that you had to do maintenance on constantly.

So when people say automation, to have an automated society, like with automation as the basis of your production, even that still requires like a level of intelligence and a level of capability. Of course you need, but it will reduce the amount of workforce. I mean, we already see it.

And that's one of the reasons also that the arguments for bringing in all those third world workers, like for instance, in Western Europe or in North America, it's just so stupid because those jobs could have easily been automated. And in this sense, I believe that they're using this just as a pretext, you know, to fill in with so many migrants. Right.

So it's obviously just false pretense. Yeah, yeah, yeah. But still, nevertheless, I believe they, in the future, who knows what will happen? I think we're slowly beginning to see this now.

Naturally, this is a transition. It will take time, but I already see, for instance, if you look at the traditional, if you look at the statistic in Sweden, we had a, if I use this concept of manual labors, like during the 60s, 70s, we had like 55% to 60% of industrial workers. And now 2021, the statistics show that it's reduced to 11.5%. Now that gives you some, that gives you a good indication that we are heading toward a service sector and the jobs and the car manufacturers and so on.

We already see how they are beginning to automate to some extent. Naturally, not all of it, but we see it. Zygarde wanted to add something.

Yeah. Zygarde? No, actually, I didn't want to add anything to that. But I could say something.

I could say that I agree with Dungard's point that there's no such thing as a machine running itself. That's like in Terminator 2, you know, that's sort of like a utopian fantasy or a dystopian fantasy that the machines are just going to somehow run, run, run. But a machine is not something that is self-conscious and it can't, it has no agency.

Only an organism has agency and a machine is not an organic structure. Contrary to transhumanism and all these other, you know, Elon Musk style perspectives, you're not going to merge man with machine. The only thing you're going to do is destroy society and destroy people's existence.

But that's one extreme, you know, point of view. And I understand that. However, I mean, if you look at the societies from, let's say, from the 80s until now, it has changed drastically with the technological transformation and who knows in the future where it will lead to.

I mean, yeah. I will give, wait a second. I will give example that was given to me by our brother from Germany, Christopher.

He showed me something that is quite popular right now in Germany, obviously not so widespread, but I've heard that Bulgarian farmers also are interested in that. It's a German, of course, German research development is basically farming robot. It's a robot that is basically doing, it's seeding the field and it's, then it's, basically it's harvesting everything, everything.

And basically this replaced, and basically Christopher told me that this replaced the labor work of seven, eight, he said, Romanians, but most likely it's gypsies, right? Let's be honest here. And this means that first of all, can you imagine what kind of hominid this could be if you are replaced by robot, right? Seven, eight of them. But the farmers in Germany and soon in Bulgaria are giving something like 70, 80,000 euro for these robots, for this machine.

And they're replacing the work of seven, eight, not very highly qualified workers. And this means that it's for the farmers, at least it's a financially attractive, this kind of machines, because they're investing this sum of money. And in the next, I don't know, five, 10 years, they're saving money from the salaries of these workers.

And that, of course, I suppose, of course, this machine is not self-conscious for now, so someone is programming and it's working behind the pool, so to say, with this machine. But still you need only one programmer and maybe one that is pushing the buttons here. Oh, yes.

I mean, it will reduce the workforce. I don't mean that we will have machines that will do everything by their own, but it will have a profound impact on how many people are employed in the future. I believe that this certainly will happen.

I mean, this is one example. I can give you more examples from the industry sector, especially, for instance, the car manufacturer, Volvo and so on, what they're pushing through these policies. So yeah, so we see this.

And this will only create much more problems when we have these third worlders that will try to settle down and get a life and so on. So I just see it, we will have more friction and more fractionalization in our societies. Sure.

I mean, I'm sorry that I reacted like a knuckle dragger to your proposition there. I understand what you meant. You're saying that, yes, it will decrease the labor requirement or the labor demand.

So I understand that. I guess all I'm saying is that, I mean, I understand what you're saying there. And so that's been a trend that's been going on in the Western world and in America too, for like maybe several generations now.

And so successively since the baby boom, the generations have gotten smaller. There's been fewer and fewer children born, which you would expect to be a natural consequence of the fact that, yeah, you just don't need that many hands. Like you don't need that much labor and life is easy.

And it's been reoriented from production to consumption. It's like John McAfee said in some interview he had with Keith Woods, obviously before he got whacked in some Spanish prison, he's dead now. But he did say at one point, there's never been a case in history where automation has caused like starvation or a population decline.

Well, it'll slowly cause a population decline because people will stop breeding. But basically what he said is you become a consumer at that point, you have all this excess stuff to consume. It depends on the values of the society when the Jew control society and their goal is just to wipe away the white race.

Then obviously they'll do whatever they can in their power to reduce the birth rate of the white population and increase the birth rate of the non-white population. But when things become sufficiently chaotic with all the race war and tension, then eventually there's going to be a focus on white women being displaced from their workforce because the feminism will be shut out basically one way or the other. Feminism is going to go the way of the dodo.

But because- And propagate the species. If you look at the structure in Sweden, for instance, you know, when many migrants came over here, for European migrants that is, they were automatically, they received a job and everything. And the high level of standard during the 80s and 90s were quite good in Sweden.

And we have went to an enormous transformation. And nowadays it's very difficult for the younger, for the youth to get a job and so on. It's high competitions and stuff like that.

So imagine when we have these chunks of large portions of these third worlders that cannot even read, you know. I mean, to integrate them, well, good luck with that. Well, they're just brought in here as a slave force to as like an invading army so they can attack the white population.

And then create societal chaos. And also, if you look at the other side of that, because we are in a scissor situation, we're attacked. If you look at the left, if you study the left in Sweden, when I grew up, for instance, they were so active.

They were visiting their harbors, the factories. They were agitating for the white working class. And nowadays, well, then they start forming love circles whenever a Muslim terrorist commits a terrorist act because they want to side with these third worlders.

So we see also a transformation there. They have adopted a feminist agenda. They're pro, you know, open borders and stuff like that.

They don't even care about, for instance, the Swedish working class. So it's much easier, I would say, to co-opt the Swedish working class into our movement because it does not resonate with them, you know, because they see that the left is not even interested in them anymore. Yeah, that's a good thing.

Just the only thing that needs to be done is to steer it away from Strasserism, which is obviously why they're running those PSYOPs, the NASBOL, Strasserism. Yes, yes, yes. Just to make the white working class understand that they're the ones who have their head in the guillotine and that if they want to survive at all, they have to survive based upon ethnocentrism, not economics or whatever.

I believe so too. Yeah, it goes hand in hand because I believe, for instance, that those who are the worst off are basically, for instance, in Sweden, and I see this trend all over Europe, and I believe it's the same in the US as well. Correct me if I'm wrong, but I believe that the ones who are being hit really hard by these waves of multiracialism and this vocism and so on are the white working lower middle classes because the plutocrats, they will, I mean, they don't care if it will become transformed to 90% non-white.

I mean, they're still able to protect their wealth and security and so on. So they are not the ones who, they don't give a crap about the ethnic working classes. Yeah, that's exactly right.

That's the class that is being more or less decimated is the lower white, lower class. It's because that's the way these arrogant internationalist plutocrats view anybody as just an individual economic unit that can be substituted for another one because their whole worldview is egalitarian and they have a raceless universalist worldview which derives from Christianity. I heard an interview with William Crystal's son when he said, sorry, Irving Crystal's son, Bill Crystal, who was in the past, I believe, a Republican.

He said, you know, I have no issues if we bring in all those, if we replace the white working class with a Mexican working class. It's not an issue whatsoever. And that tells you something.

And that came from a pretty much, you know, hardcore Republican in the past. I think he shifted over to Democrats now. Yeah, they're all a bunch of hypocrites.

They basically just say whatever gives them money and gives them power. That's the only thing they really care about. Exactly, exactly.

So they're not loyal to preserve any kind of heritage or traditionalism in that sense. Egalitarianism. Exactly, yeah.

Yeah, they're the same phenomenon in Bulgaria. Basically, they're celebrating these rare few examples of gypsies or whatever. They're more like specialists, like doctors in most cases, or like dentists or like... Or Indian programmer.

Oh, whatever. I mean, gypsies are not on the level of the Indian programmers. But when they somehow, in these rare cases, when you have these smarter than the average gypsies, they were celebrating in the media, like this is the future, like you must not care if your doctor or dentist is a gypsy or Bulgarian or whatever.

This is the future. So basically, this is the population replacement. And this is preparing... And the same goes for CIVNET.

They have no issues if we bring in Chinese or if we bring Indian doctors or Indian programmers and so on. But I see this just as the same threat to us, because we will be under a totally different regime if that happens. So, yeah.

Yeah, it's unfortunate. By the way, Doomgart, can you tell us a little bit about the Mexican workforce in America? How they're dealing with... Well, it's interesting here where I live. It seems like there's now hiring signs everywhere, like in front of most of the businesses in town.

Like everybody's hiring. It doesn't seem like they can find enough Mexicans even to deal with it. And I don't know.

I heard that after the Corona-Chan debacle, basically, it became impossible to cross the border. This is what I heard from Mexican kids, that the border crossing became impossible. I think I saw that also in a documentary about cartels, like drug cartels are even having a hard time now.

So the thing is, probably the only friend, the only buddy, I guess. I don't want to call him a friend, but I guess he's kind of a friend in the sense that while we're at work, we're palling around, is a Mexican kid. And he knows that I'm racist, like he doesn't, he's racist too.

That's the good thing about the Mexicans, is that they're all racists. But the thing is, it's kind of like all these memes that you used to see on TV about the Irish or the Polish immigrants to America, where it's like, oh, well, they're really hard workers and good workers, but they're just drunk and disorderly and irreverent. And they're just kind of crude.

Like, that's what they would say about the Irish. It was probably true. I mean, I'm part Irish.

That's kind of the way I am. Just like a pugnacious sort of person. But the thing is, with the Mexicans, it's on steroids.

I feel like, I mean, Mexicans are really crazy. I mean, they're not all bad, I guess. But it's like the stuff that goes on in their family life or in their personal life is stuff that if you're a white man with any maturity or any brain power at all, you ought to see that as kind of ridiculous.

Like this Mexican kid I'm speaking of, he's got three baby mamas. That's an expression we use here in America. You probably know what it means, right? So he's got three different women that he's seated that have like, I don't know, I think he's got five kids or so by now.

Like when he was a kid in high school, he was a total wreck. Like a fucking hellion. This kid was a hellraiser when he was a teenager in high school.

And he was talking about how he told me about how he had sex with like 50 different girls, which could just be bullshit. But I don't know. I would believe it.

It could be true. I should be honest with you. It could be true.

Yeah. I mean, it probably is not that hard to do nowadays. So he's just basically like after the 4th of July weekend, I talked to him.

I was like, so how'd your weekend go? And he said, oh, well, I was drunk constantly. Like I got drunk Friday night, Friday night. I woke up Saturday and drank all day.

I woke up Sunday and drank all day. We had Monday off. So I woke up Monday and drank all day.

I mentioned to him that I was doing some home brewing and he's like, whatever you make, as long as it's got alcohol in it, I'll drink it. Whether it tastes good or not. And I'm like, okay, I'll let you test it for me, I guess.

Or maybe not because you'll drink anything. So they're just kind of like, I remember some job I was at and there were some Mexicans working there. And one of them brought his son to work there because his son got kicked out of high school for stabbing a kid with a pencil.

And this kid was just kind of big and fat and kind of ridiculous looking. Like I think he had an Afro as a Mexican. That's a little weird, but some of them do have Afros.

Then where I work now, there's a Mexican guy who's worked there for a long time. And basically all of his sons who are in trouble constantly, they come and work there because they can't get a job anywhere else. So he gets them a job there.

And one of his sons got fired recently because he took the privilege like way too far. He thought he could just fuck off too much. And finally the old white dude who's the manager got sick of it and he's like, all right, you're out of here.

But it took a lot to get him fired because he was the son of this other Mexican who works there. But anyways, he's got one of his other sons who works there now who's got an ankle bracelet on. So yeah, they're kind of like what the Jews, like the Jewish media, Hollywood tries to portray the Irish immigrants.

They try to portray them as being like, oh, they were just, it was rough. And those were rough times. And so they did rough stuff.

And, but they became part of the story of America and it's all good. So it's like gangs in New York. It's like gangs of New York, but with brown people.

And it's actually the way it really works. Like they actually do get into a lot of crazy shit. Like, I think one of them told me that his best friend committed suicide because he took the blame for him when he abducted some other kid and was like stabbing him and beating the shit out of him.

And the cops came. And like, if they'd caught him for it, obviously he was a repeat offender. So he would have gone to prison for a long time.

But instead he let his friend take the blame for him. So his friend went to juvie for like half a year. And then when he got out, he killed himself shortly afterwards.

So it's a lot of fucked up stories. Like child abuse is rampant. Like they beat the shit out of their kids, like really brutally.

They brutally beat the shit out of the kids. Their dads are in prison frequently. So they're not around.

And when they're not around, their moms are like, well, your dad's in prison. So you can do whatever you want. This is literally what this kid told me that his mom said this to him.

She said to him, you can do whatever you want because your dad's in prison. So there's somewhere between Irish and blacks. I would say they're worse than the comical depictions of the Irish.

But they're not quite on the level of, well, they're close to the level of blacks, but they're not quite as stupid. But they're getting close. They're getting really close.

So the church wants to bring in a lot of Mexicans, don't they? Well, they want to bring in a lot of everyone except for whites because the Lutherans are bringing in Somalis in the Dakotas, in North and South Dakota. And I cannot think of any justifiable reason to want Somalis to be in your country. Like they can't even, I've heard they can't even push a broom.

Like they can't do any kind of job. I guess the more they bring in, the more money they get for their churches from the government or something like that. That's what it's Canada.

Probably. Have you guys been to Europe, by the way? Yeah, I've been there several times. Okay.

I've been to Sweden twice, actually. I love Sweden. The place I love most in Sweden is Gotland.

Have you been there? If not, you should go. Yeah, yeah. Yes, I've been to Gotland.

It's beautiful. Yeah, I wish I could live there, maybe someday. But anyways, yeah.

But Sweden is also, you know, not that good. It depends. When were you here last time? I think it was in 2018.

Okay. Last time I was there, 2018 or 20, yeah, 2018. But you were in Stockholm and the other cities too, or? No, I never spent much time in Stockholm.

I was hanging out with dudes in the Nordic Resistance. So I was out in other parts of the country. But I went, you know, I went around a little bit, but I wasn't there for very long.

The first time I went there, I was only there for like a weekend. The second time I went, I was there for, I think, a week. And then I went to Iceland and hung out there for a week.

So anyways, yeah, it's a great place. I mean, it would be perfect if it weren't for the fucking batshit crazy politicians and the fucking crazy people. But, you know.

Mm-hmm. So because there are so many MENA refugees here, it's unbelievable. For these last 20 years, it has radically transformed, you know, people from Afghanistan, Pakistan, you know, North Africa, Iraq, Kurdistan and stuff like that.

And also a huge portion from Africa as well, Ghana and Congo and so on. And Somalia, not to mention them too. Yeah, it's just absolutely unjustifiable.

It's just chaos for chaos's sake. I mean, when I was in Europe last time, I visited Germany for a few days too. And I was in Hamburg, Germany.

That's the one that's like on the river and has a big port there. And it was a beautiful city. Like, I'm looking at the city and the architecture and I'm looking at the big ships coming into the port and all the vehicle traffic and everything.

And I'm seeing, okay, this is a city that only one group of people in the world could have possibly made. Obviously, this is a German city, but it's full of Africans. Like, it was fucking flooded with Africans and Arabs.

And I was fucking furious. Like, I was livid the whole time. Like, people wouldn't get near me because they could tell just by looking at me.

Like, when I was on the fucking train waiting for a train, like, I was fucking fuming. I'm like, what in the fuck is going on here? Where's the German people? There's no goddamn Germans in the whole city. So anyways, yeah, I don't ever really want to go back to Germany.

I mean, when I went in 2012, I think, I went to Berlin and hung out with a buddy in 2012. And then we went to his wedding in Poland. And Berlin was beautiful at that point.

I mean, there were maybe some Turks, but I assume that they were visitors or whatever. I mean, I guess they have a Turk population there, but it wasn't noticeable, really. That was before the migrant crisis.

And then we went to Poland, and Poland was great. Like, Poland was beautiful. And I went to Poland in 2018, and it was also really great.

Even in 2018, Poland was probably one of the best experiences in Europe that I had. Sorry. I'm going to give you that.

I have been in Poland on several times. I have friends there and so on. And I usually, I like to go there during weekends and so on.

I've been to several cities and so on. Poland is definitely a fantastic country in that sense. If you speak about ethnic homogeneity, you know, so it's homogeneous in that sense.

Yeah. Well, I mean, even just in the style of living, because I was in the city of Krakow, which was like the old capital. And I was also out, yeah, I was also out in a village working on a farm for a little while.

So I was by some small town there that was really great looking. And it just seemed idyllic, you know, like a perfect small town to live in. And then Krakow, yeah, Krakow is like a really awesome looking city.

It has all these ancient towers and castles and buildings and all that stuff. So I walked through the castle and saw a bunch of cool stuff and walked along the river. And so the food is great.

You know, the beer is great. All the architecture is awe-inspiring. The river looks great.

They had this park there that was full of weeping willows. And that looked really awesome. A lot of great stuff.

I mean, yeah, definitely. In Central Europe is very much spared from these problems that the Western Europe has encountered for these last 20 years. So, yes.

Yeah, I will add a little bit. I was traveling the previous week with my friend. Comrade, I would say we're looking for houses out of the big cities.

And it looks like there was a process of, I would say, revigoration of these small settlements in the countryside. And I found out that a lot of Bulgarians and foreigners that are living in Bulgaria are moving out in these small cities or in these small... In the countryside. In the countryside, yeah.

And I found that a lot of Englishmen actually are moving. Germans also are moving to Bulgaria. Because I've talked with one of the guys.

He said that the situation in England is totally unbearable. And he thinks that in Bulgaria is much more, how to say, peaceful than in England. Yeah, I used to work in London.

And I had to travel there and I have to be there. And last time I was in London, I think it was in 2016. And I will never forget when I was there, when I was a child.

And then in 2016, I was totally shocked. I mean, really shocked. And I lived on a quite good street when I was there.

It was near the financial centers and so on. But nevertheless, there were so many people from Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, everywhere, blacks and so on. So you were really in a shock.

Yeah, it's just... And for the listeners to have some perspective, basically, these areas that I'm talking about, they're basically 100% Bulgarian areas. I mean, we managed to see a single group of gypsies that are trying to basically... So from what I get, the Bulgarian police were keeping them out of these areas. Because you know that gypsies, they're causing trouble.

So they're burglaries and things like that. So they're keeping them away from these areas that are living these Bulgarians and Englishmen, Germans and things like that. So this is also another thing.

So I'm under the impression that a lot of people, especially with this Corona pandemic or whatever, a lot of people started to move out of the big cities in the countryside. And there was a process of Western Europeans to migrate to Eastern Europe, which is kind of the opposite of what we had before. And it looks like they're enjoying the culture and the cuisine of the Balkans, also the climate, so... Yeah, sure.

Not only that, but also if you look at the living standard for them, if you retire in the West, you get a pretty decent pension. And then it's much cheaper than to live, for instance, in Sweden or Switzerland and Germany. So, I mean, the best option is to live either in Poland or Croatia, where the wages are totally different and also the prices.

Yeah, so definitely. The only problem that I have with this is that these kinds of people, especially the British, the British are quite a community in Bulgaria. Quite an obnoxious community.

What did you say? Quite an obnoxious community. Yeah, yeah, kind of. I mean, the problem is that these people that are coming, so I know that there are some conservative Englishmen coming also, but most of these people actually, they caused the problem in their own country.

Exactly. They destroyed the future. They destroyed the future for the English kids.

Literally, they gave the girls, especially of England, to be raped and groomed by these Islamist... Pakistani grooming, yeah. Yeah, yeah. And they are escaping to Bulgaria or to Croatia or to Poland.

And the problem is that we also had presidents here, on the local level, of course, elected deputies that are British. So basically, yeah, because at least back in the time, they were part of the European Union. And you know what? It wouldn't surprise me if these people, these Westerners move over to Eastern and Central Europe, all of a sudden start, you know, pushing our government to adopt the same model as in the West.

It wouldn't surprise me, to be honest with you. I won't be surprised, honestly, because these people are basically traitors to their own countries and they bring their liberalism with them. But the thing is that what I'm trying to spread is actually that nationalists, and especially racial racials from Western Europe and America could come to our country and settle.

And that would be ideal. I mean, it's racially minded people who understand what's going on, but not those bourgeoisie who's got the money and who... You know, for instance, in Croatia, we have also many rich British people moving over and buying houses. And I mean, and they also want like, oh, why couldn't Croatia be diversified or more like other countries in the European Union? It's so weird, you know.

It seems like they have a mental illness that they're not capable of understanding causality. You know, they destroy their own countries and they're so moral and superior. And then they just take all the money and they leave and they destroy other people's lives.

And then they just recreate the same problems everywhere they go. It's just absurd and stupid. And you see that in Canada too, even though Canada is comparatively not so much of a problem outside of the major cities.

They, all these spoiled people, usually it's a bunch of Zionist Christians and not just liberals, but Zionist Christians. They take all the money and then they buy up property and then they end up controlling the small towns that they invest. So that's a very serious danger for any nationalist because it may very well be that they're playing the role of a subversive, you know, for the Jews, like the Jews' genocide agenda.

They're basically destroying the cities. And then when they destroy the cities, then they can claim that they're the remnants in the countryside. And then they just create the same multicultural hell in the countryside as well.

So it's just, you know, like a virus that spreads around everywhere it goes. Can I give one example, just, I'm sorry, because we visited this little village to see some houses and we saw that eventually if you have something like, I don't know, let's say 15,000 American dollars, 15,000, you can buy a house in quite good condition plus a little bit of land. That's great.

Yeah, right. And the climate in Bulgaria is very close to the climate in Croatia, let's say. Yeah, yes, yes.

It's maybe Croatia had a little bit more Mediterranean type of climate. In the coastal Dalmatia, perhaps, yeah, around that region. Yeah, it could be.

But definitely, Bulgaria is definitely on my destination list. Yeah, you're welcome. But I'll give you a very nice example how the race actually matters, because your guests, he didn't understand, obviously, what is the difference.

I mean, your guests on YouTube, he didn't understand what is the difference between race and sub-race. You mean the last show that we did, me and him, regarding if civil nationalism is sufficient to make the U.S. survive? I counter-signaled him on so many occasions. So I just wanted to give the audience that are tuning into my channel so they can hear his perspective and then they can judge for themselves.

Because we went into a discussion about Yugoslavia and it was pretty much from a sloppy regional perspective, like he viewed it, you know? Yeah, but I'll give you an example. So basically, as I said, in that village, there were some English families with their kids and they're growing in Bulgaria and they're playing with Bulgarian kids and they're studying in the same school. As I said, basically, no gypsies there.

There were, as I said, because I've talked with a quite nice Bulgarian energetic lady. She's running the show. She's a wife of the local businessman that wants to restore this region.

And these English kids, they're integrating quite well. I mean, they speak very good Bulgarian. I was surprised.

And they're dancing Bulgarian folk dances. So basically, they're Bulgarized or whatever. These fucking gypsies or whatever, let's say half a millennium here, they're barely speaking Bulgarian.

They are shit. They cannot work a proper job 90% of the time. Let's say 90% are quite generous here.

And this is the difference between a race, like two different races, like these gypsies supposedly from India, right? And super races like Bulgarians and Englishmen, obviously, from the different super races. But still, being Europeans and having a similar origin and having a similar culture, we can integrate, right? Sure. So this is the difference.

And this is not working with the foreign components like Turks and gypsies. I don't know, Pakistanis and guys like that. Yeah, I imagine.

Because my fear is, I just want to point this out. My fear is that the way that it is right now is that the governments in Poland and in Hungary and also Croatia and definitely Bulgaria and so on, that they will... What worries me a lot is the further they go along the way with the European Union is that I'm very worried that Brussels will force them to open up their borders, you know, to somehow disperse these migrants that are coming over in massive numbers. The last show you and I had was that I pointed out the demographic trajectory in Africa.

I think in 2045, we will have 2050, we'll have 2 billion Africans. And when those social institutions break down, they will try to do everything they can to come over to Europe. And this will be the biggest challenge ever, I would say.

Any thoughts on this? So that's why it's extremely important to network and to have good cooperation with many European patriots, definitely. I think that you know that at that point, if they decided to open the borders in Bulgaria, there will be a revolution. I mean, the first encounter with the refugees in Bulgaria, it was in 2015.

Yeah, so basically, there was a camp for these Arab and Afghani refugees, supposedly refugees, actually invaders, near to the capital of Sofia. And at that time, I visited Sofia for several times, and I saw the first time these people, including Africans, let's use the quotient, and these Arabs laying on the street and things like that. They started to attack Bulgarian women, interestingly enough, to knife the Bulgarian women.

And the response was almost immediate. I mean, these hooligans, these evil radicals and things like that. They just... There was several deaths of these refugees, and the camp, the refugee camp was burned down.

So this is the response that you can... This is the reaction, yes. And I suppose that in Croatia, the situation will be more or less the same. Yeah, in Croatia, if this would happen, the reaction would be the same.

No doubt. Yeah, no doubt. However, what we saw... I don't know if you guys have seen the footages from these third worlders taking over cities like Milan, Italy, and so on.

They're destroying everything, attacking the police, attacking the civil population, and so on. And it's kind of interesting. You always see it's like there are 25-year-old men, basically, up to their thirties.

No families, no females, and so on. Only men, the majority, same pattern. Unbelievable.

Any thoughts, Sigurd? Well, basically, it's just an invading army that the Jews are bringing in so that they can arm them. The Jews and their collaborators, the liberals and the Zionists and Christians, they probably already have. I think you might have discussed that on a previous show about shipping containers and automatic weapons that they bring in there.

They probably already have all their automatic weapons in the countries already in Europe, and they're just waiting to arm the population of these savages. And then they can just, you know, rile them up with their Islamic insanity ideology, making them think that it's the Imam Mahdi or some garbage that's going to come and blah, blah, blah. And they have to go and kill the evil white man because the white man is Amalek or Esau or whatever it is.

Or it's a racist. Yeah, yeah. Exactly.

That's one thing. Sorry, I didn't mean to cut you. That's one thing that I don't understand with some U.S. patriots that they see, you know, Islam as an ally against, you know, the state of Israel, that they were somehow miraculously allied with white ethnocentrists.

I just find it ludicrous. It will never happen. Yeah.

There are rabbis that are quoted saying that Islam is an iron broom that will be used to sweep away Amalek or Esau. And they look upon the white race as Esau or Amalek in their religious theology. What is the situation? I mean, we talked about a little bit the previous time.

What is the situation in Bosnia, if you know, with these Islamic influence from Saudi Arabia, mostly? Do you know? Yeah. I mean, the Bosnian Muslims, they live in the center of Bosnia and they're in between squeezed. In the northeastern part, you have Croats, Bosnians, and then in the southern part, you have the Bosnian Serbs.

So they're squeezed in between. They're kind of torn. So when this civil war erupted in Yugoslavia, they received help from the Turks.

They received help from the Saudi Arabians. And also, you had an insurgency from Hezbollah as well, from Iran. So they actually competed for the influence of the Bosnian Muslims.

They're very torn. On the one hand, I don't know how to view them. I view them basically as torn Turks in the Balkan region.

I won't call them. I mean, racially speaking, I've known some Bosniaks. They are similar to us.

I mean, they're white people. I will say that the guy... I agree. I agree here.

They have a distinct identity. I'm going to give you that. The reason for the war was not that they wanted to create a caliphate or that they were totally, that they bought into this Salafist propaganda and it was a huge security threat for the Croats or for the Serbs.

That's not true. They have a distinct... And it was basically, they did not want to either side with the Croats or with the Serbs. And they wanted to preserve some kind of distinct identity.

So, it was basically, they're nationalistic. They wanted to create their own enclave. So, it was a mixture of Islam with their own identity.

Yes, that's true. And by the way, they also claim that they're speaking totally different language from the Croatians and Serbs, which is kind of... To be honest, I don't see that. I mean, if I speak to a Bosnian, I understand him or her thoroughly.

Yes. And then you have these greater... For instance, the Croats, they made aspirations also to carve up Bosnia and Herzegovina, to take that part. So, they actually maybe wanted to divide Bosnia between Serbs and Croats.

I think that was the scheme during the Homeland War in 1991 to 1995. And what can I say? They were in between. Because the Croats, they had their nation state, the same goes for the Serbs, and they were left off.

The Yugoslav identity that they had, because you have to understand with the Bosniaks, they were always loyal to Tito's Yugoslavia. There was not single one aspiration to create their own enclave or something like that. However, in the case when it comes to the Croats, we always wanted our own homeland, for sure.

It was never... They could never wipe us out. That's why the Croat diaspora, they wanted this to happen, this war. The sooner, the better, they thought.

And thankfully, it happened during 1991 to 1995, so we did not have any Russian intervention. Yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah. A lot of people don't understand, because they don't understand history, but they say that Croatians were recognized by Bulgarians back in... What is it? 7th, 8th century, something like that? So they make a difference between Croatians and Serbs.

So we are talking about total identity, because I've heard some Serbian propaganda that Croatians are basically Serbs that were converted to conservative. Oh, yeah, I hear this all the time. This is total bullshit.

I mean, let's... I get this all the time on these comments. They, you know, with the Serbian, the Serbian... This is... This is total bullshit. About the Bosniaks, well, Bosniaks, they were... I mean, they adopted Bogomilism, basically.

And then they adopted, after the Turkish invasion, they adopted Islam. Yeah, for sure. Racially speaking, I know Bosniaks, white people.

Sure. These elites, this Muslim army that they had, these elite units, they were very weird, because you're talking about these tall, blonde, blue-eyed guys that are with... That basically... But I'm very... I don't mean to cut you off. I'm a little bit torn when it comes to the Bosniaks, because, like I said previously, they were very much for... They wanted to sustain Yugoslavia, because then, I believe, to be honest with you, that their identity as Yugoslavs was, you know, very, very strong.

And when this entity disintegrated, all of a sudden, they were very torn. And then, also, on top of that, the other problem is that one side, let's say, that fought against the Croats are very anti-Croats. It's due to what happened in 1992, 1993, and then we were forced to go into an alliance with the Bosniaks.

It was during the Dayton Agreement in 1994. Otherwise, I think that conflict would have been not resolved that easily. And also, if you look at... For instance, when you meet with the Bosniaks and so on, they would say, okay, you know, we were subjected to gruesome atrocity by the Serbs.

And this is true. This is really true. This is no bullshit.

They were really subjected to gruesome atrocity. That is really a fact. I'm going to give it... But then, on the other hand, you have some radicals that are very anti-Croat, too, especially when it comes to the future of Bosnia and Herzegovina.

So, who knows what will happen there, too. I believe, okay, the conflict is resolved, but it could erupt, you know. I'm quite sure of it.

I will say that, just to defend the Bosniaks, that they also had a unit in Waffen-SS, Hanjar. So, or some people said that, basically, they are Muslim Croatians. Yes, I know that.

I don't know what to say. It is a little bit special with them. However, they put a very bad resistance, to be honest with you, against the Serbian offensive.

I mean, to be honest, they lay down their weapons and they tried to compromise with them, and this got us into huge problems, because we put a fierce resistance. If you just look at it in Bukovar, the resistance that we had against the largest army, the fourth largest army in Europe, we crippled the Yugoslavian army, totally, with our own bare hands. And this was in 1991.

No NATO support there at that time. I'll be, by the way, just saying, I'll say it again, because a lot of people have this interesting idea that the Serbs are these base defenders of Europe, of Christianity, something like that. Oh, that's all bullshit, yeah.

Why the Serbs, especially in the Republika Srpska, why they received the weapons, the weapons from Israel, actually, not directly from Russia? Do you have any idea? Not only that, they were very much armed by the Russians. And they also, well, look, if you have to go back and study the Chetnik history, I believe this is the one of the most important thing. I believe, sincerely, the Chetniks never had any kind of issues, for instance, with the special group that we're talking about.

The special group, yeah, the special. The special group that is never taught, if you look at throughout history, for instance, the Chetnik movement, they were very much anti-German and anti-Catholic. They always claim, for instance, oh, we're under a fascist conspiracy, the evil Ustasa in collaboration with the Catholic Church and Germany, they wanted to destroy something so sacred as the state of Yugoslavia.

And then, and actually, so if you look at history, for instance, you know, the leader of the Chetnik movement, Vojislav Šešil, you've probably heard of him, more or less. Yeah, I know, I know, yeah. Yeah, and he is considered as a, you know, fierce, resisting the new world order and he is hailed by these Nazbols and pro-Russians and so on.

But the interesting fact with Šešil is he has never, ever criticized the influence from the special people or the lobby groups, ever. He keeps repeating this same old garbage propaganda that it was a conspiracy of Germans and the Catholic Church and that they are out to destroy the Serbs. Quite interesting, I would say.

There was a group of Bulgarian special people, because there were, you know, the situation, maybe I explained that, that our special people were sent in special camps to work. So, they were not sent in Germany and these special people work here, but a group of these people, I believe two or five thousand, something like that, actually joined the Serbian Chetniks and they joined the Yugoslavian Partisans under the command of Tito. And I believe that they were one of two of our special types that were basically, most likely, they were Soviet agents that actually were under direct command of Tito and he appreciated them very, very highly.

Meanwhile, my granddad, he was an officer in the anti-partisan unit in what is now southern Bulgaria, what is now northern Greece and what is now the area of Nis. So, basically, these ones were joined again to Bulgaria by Hitler, give it back. So, basically, he, my dad, he was... But this is also crazy when I hear people like Keith Woods and so on, you know, hailing Yugoslavia as a successful project and Tito as a, you know, good leader going against the New World Order.

It's such a bullshit, I mean, because... Any thoughts on you guys, the rest of you, what do you think? I personally don't know anything about that at all, other than that Tito guy was some communist dictator or something like that. Yeah. I don't see how anyone could possibly look upon that as anything quote-unquote based or whatever jargon they use.

Most of these people are so naive and gullible that they don't know anything at all about history or anything. They don't bother to research and actually investigate. Even a simple Wikipedia search would be able to uncover the truth about the psyops that they buy into.

That's true. Zoom? Well, when I was in the army, I recall some guys who said that they had served in Serbia. I guess there were some US soldiers who were stationed there.

I don't know, they told me some stuff about, oh, there was some hotel where there was a massacre and so on and so forth, but I don't really remember who was the responsible party according to them, but I don't know. I remember one of them telling me that he was stationed there and he was ordered, because this was at the end of the war, and so he was ordered to enforce a curfew but not to actually fire his weapon. So they didn't even give him bullets for his assault rifle, but he had a grenade launcher attached to his assault rifle, according to him, and he had one grenade in it.

So instead of shooting, because he didn't have any bullets, he shot his grenade off. But he shot it at a person who was too close for the grenade to actually go through the number of rotations necessary to arm it. So he just hit the guy in the back and knocked him over.

But he still got court-martialed for doing that, apparently. I don't know. Thing is, when you're in the American army, lots of guys tell you lots of bullshit stories, and you kind of have to learn intuitively how to know when somebody is just saying something really implausible and stupid.

You know? And I've heard a lot of them, a lot of whale tales, or big fish stories, as we like to call them here in America. Everybody's caught a big fish in the fucking U.S. Army, except for me. I never did anything that cool.

But in any case, I don't really know much about it. I recall Varg Vikern saying that he wished that he had broken out of prison during the 90s so he could go and join whoever was fighting for Europe, according to him. I don't know which side he thought was fighting for Europe in the Serbian war.

But I don't really know a lot about it. But the fact that the Clintons, the Clinton administration got involved, I'm assuming that they picked the wrong side. So whoever they were helping, I assume, is the bad guys.

That's just good rule of thumb. If it's supported by the Clinton family or by the American regime in general, it's usually the bad guys that they're helping. You know, I figure that's a safe bet.

I know Bulgarians that were fighting for both sides. So basically, the commies were fighting for the Serbs, of course. And the Bulgarian nationalist group were fighting for the Croatsians.

I know a guy that, of course, I won't mention, that was a sniper. And I believe he fought against the Bosniaks, actually. Yeah, during 1992 and onwards.

Yugoslavia is a little bit complicated, just to correct you there. Because let's say when Yugoslavia fell apart, it was meant that the international so-called community of this new world order, they wanted to give the Serbs a green light so they could sustain Yugoslavia as an entity. Because in the Western media, it was described as a successful multicultural project.

So the powers that be in the beginning did not want to carve up Yugoslavia. This is a myth. And when the Croatsians seek their independence, the entire world, apart from Germany, apart from, you know, Ukraine, Bulgaria, and some South American countries and so on that were very suspicious of what happened against their Catholic roots and so on, they started to give you know, started to arm the Croats.

And when this greater Serbian project failed, and I believe it was into 1993, 1994, when Serbs started installing all those concentration camps in Bosnia and so on. And when they started going very rough on the Bosniaks, and then they all of a sudden shifted. Then NATO started to go against the Serbs.

But in the beginning, it was never their intention to do so. The fact of the matter was that they wanted to sustain that country no matter what. So yeah, it's a little bit complicated than what is usually seen.

However, I'm going to give you that during 1994, the Clintons, they forced the Croats and the Bosniaks to go hand in hand together against the Serbs. That's true. And then shortly thereafter, they started the bombardment campaign against Serb installations in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

That is also true. Yeah, yeah, I understand that. So basically, we did not care.

We just wanted our country and all. We did not want to do anything with Yugoslavia. It's not based.

Our dissidents were killed by the Yugoslav secret service. And we don't want to have anything to do with Yugoslavia. We just want to live by ourselves.

I mean, it was kind of lucky that that period, Russia was destabilized because they would intervene on the side of the Serbs. This is almost 100%. I'm 100% sure about that.

Because even if they were destabilized, they managed to send Russian mercenaries, if I remember correctly. Yes, that's also true. And it becomes a little bit problematic.

That is, even if you look at foreign policy in general, I believe that it's a little bit too simplified to take this. Whatever the US is doing, we have to take the diametrical opposite position as well. I like to view it from both sides of the corner.

Usually, it's not that black and white. It's always a gray zone, for instance, in many cases, not in all of them. And again, I will say about Tito.

Tito was a very interesting case. I believe he was a double agent of the Soviets and of the Brits, because there were a lot of fishy things in his background, so to say. Some people believe even that he's an illegitimate child of a Jew.

But actually, I don't think that this is true. I think that he's Croatian, but... His face doesn't look very Jewish. I don't know.

I don't know. There are a lot of legends about him. And many Croats, they believe that the actual Tito really died during the Spanish Civil War, and it was a Russian agent, you know.

Really? Yeah, so there are so many stories, especially from the old Ustasa, the OGs, the Ustasa, they think he was a Russian. But I don't know, you know. There are so many stories about him, but... I've heard some interesting things, but I will tell you something that maybe you don't know.

There was a plan of adding Bulgaria to Yugoslavia in 1946. So basically, the first step was basically adding Macedonia to Yugoslavia. And by Macedonia, I mean what is now the ex-Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

So actually, this process started even before that, in the 19th century, because, you know, the Serbs had a very aggressive national policy towards their neighbors. So basically, one of the first things was, basically, they started to burn down Bulgarian church blocks. They were supported by the Russians, but also by the Turks.

Turks also supported the Serbs, which is also an interesting thing, and a lot of people don't understand that. Yeah, that's true too, yeah. That actually, the Turks, they had this imperial policy towards the conquered people to use the minority or the weaker population against the majority of population.

So they had this Roman idea, because the Turks themselves, the Ottomans, they started to look at themselves like some kind of Muslim variant of Byzantium Empire, which of course is going. And they adopted some of the symbology of the Byzantium Empire, like a double-headed eagle, for example. And by the way, this is going in the direction of Dukinism.

And that's extremely relevant now to see this cultural shift within this dissident right, how they adopt a pro-Russian agenda everywhere now. And this, for instance, I was so shocked when this happened in Ukraine, when the Russians entered in 2014. All of a sudden, the same talking points that we heard, oh, Russians, they're very based, they're also under a security threat from NATO and so on.

So it's only natural that they can go in and totally destroy Ukraine. I mean, I just, I'm shocked. And then I also heard some people saying, oh, you know, the Ukrainian government, the top of that dictator, oh, they are, you know, under Zionist influence and so on.

And of course, you can find elements there, because the way I see it in that conflict, you have Zionist infiltration from both sides, definitely, because they don't, yeah, and that's the fact. But how they forget about the heavy Zionist influence from Russia, it's unbelievable. I just find it shocking.

But also, I will tell you something. I was in the one pro-Ukrainian group recently in Teregra, and I was shocked to find that actually they're very sympathetic to the, I mean, the Ukrainian nationalists, they're very sympathetic to the Serbs. Very strange.

It's very strange because you have a Chetnik band that went to fight for the separatists there in Donbass. Yeah, yeah. There were, these Serbs were even admins of the Ukrainian group, and they were setting the narrative against Bulgarians, Croatians, Macedonians, interestingly enough.

So it was kind of funny to understand why is that. I mean, there was always this alliance between the Serbs and the Russians. There were so many connections that even their flags are so similar.

I don't know. I don't know what to say. But yeah.

I think that really the Russians, they wanted these conflicts. It's not like they wanted to, so everything is destroyed in the Balkans, so they can give it a new try, so they can enter again and try to control. We already see this, that they want to control the harbors in Montenegro.

We already see that they push for influence through Serbian proxies and so on. So slowly they want to take over the Balkans, and it's a perfect strategic area for the Russians. Yeah.

But we must look at the other things. Maybe this is for the future podcast, the rise of panslavism, the creation of the Slavs, like this big unity, not of some several subgroups. For example, I will divide the Slavs in the Slovenia, which is on the Balkans, right? And by Slovenia, I don't mean the Slovenians.

These are basically the speakers of the same language, which is documented, which I believe in the 8th century, we have this term documented. And then the term Slavjani, which I believe it started to be used in, I don't know, Czechs, in the 12th century or something like that. So maybe there was a thing to be said about this.

But mostly this panslavism starts from the imperial ambitions of Russia in the 18th century, when they started to expand more and more and to become this mighty imperial power that dominated Eastern Europe for a very long time. And they adopted this idea of panslavism. By the way, the idea came, it's not exactly the idea of panslavism, but the history of Slovenia is written by a Croatian monk, I believe, in the 16th or 17th century.

Maybe you will be more knowledgeable about that. So he used the term Slavjani or Sloveni for the first time, like this name for all these people. And then, because the Russians started to basically sending spies from the Balkans, because they were looking to expand the Balkans, they found the books, historical books for Croatians, for Bulgarians, and they decided that this is a very good example because of the similarity of the language, especially with the old Bulgarians, as quite a long story.

But they adopted a lot of the language from the old Bulgarians through the old Church of Slovinc. And because of this language similarity, they decided that it's good to push this panslavism on the Balkans. They started to spread, especially the influence of the Bulgarians to this myth of Grandfather Ivan.

Like this grandfather will come and save these Orthodox Slavic brothers and things like that. And interestingly enough, these panslavic lodges, I'm calling them lodges, not clubs, because they were founded by masons. Yes, that's also true.

So, and in Serbia, they found especially, I can't say, fruitful ground because the Serbs in their historical borders, they must be, I don't know, what, one third of the present territory of Serbia, something like that. And this, they wanted to expand even more. So, they adopted this idea of panslavism.

So, basically, they started to see Serbs, basically, to the Black Sea. So, they claimed Bulgarian territories. They called the Croats Catholic Serbs.

They, during the time of Kingdom of Yugoslavia, this is before the Second World War, they started to oppress the Bulgarian population in Macedonia to call them Pravi Srbi. So, they wanted at first to assimilate them. But this was not very popular there.

There are a lot of people that resisted that. So, basically, Tito just made a continuation of the old Serbian policy. So, what were the plans of Bulgaria joining Yugoslavia? So, basically, our communists, after taking power because of the Russian invasion, of course, they didn't have a lot of support.

Not really. So, they were listening every word what Stalin said. So, they were not only puppets of Stalin.

So, at first, they gave the territories that were under Bulgarian jurisdictions during the time of the Second World War that were given by the Germans, because they were with predominantly Bulgarian population there. I'm sorry for the Macedonians that are actually listening, but the fact is that you are not descendants of Alexander the Great. And they keep repeating that all the time.

Yes, they are special Slavs. They're very special. Anyway, but also the fact is that from my mother's side, my family from my mother's side, they're coming from Skopje and none of them knew that they were Macedonian like the Bavarians were Germans.

This is the thing. But when there was a rebellion in 1903, coincidentally, the Macedonians ran to Bulgaria because they were Bulgarians. And a lot of the leaders of the rebellion, basically 95, 98% were Bulgarians.

And they ran to Bulgaria because they were Bulgarians. And no one thought of themselves as Macedonian, like ethnically Macedonians. But anyway, so basically, the first phase of unification of Bulgaria with Yugoslavia was to give these territories of modern day Serbia.

Then the second phase was to give what is left from Macedonia, like Macedonia, what is in modern day Bulgaria, to give it to Yugoslavia. So my granddad that was living in Macedonia, he was forced to change his nationality and his passport from Bulgarian to Macedonian. Yeah.

And then the third phase was joining Bulgaria. So this is what was. So the second phase was canceled because of these events that happened, the split between Tito and Stalin.

Yes, exactly. 1948. Yeah.

So this happened, this prevented Bulgaria to join Yugoslavia. But at that point, Tito started to push another thing in Macedonia. He started to push a totally different identity to Macedonians.

There was created Macedonian alphabet that is on the basis of Bulgarian alphabet. They started to change the language based on the dialects, of course, even though my grandparents were speaking basically these Macedonian dialects that they're speaking. I can understand them because they're basically dialects of Bulgarian.

God damn it. I mean, even when I visited Macedonia in 2019, I can still understand them quite clearly. It's nothing new here.

But anyway, so they pushed this thing. And the thing that I've heard, and there are a lot of evidence for that, that Tito used the support of the Brits because Tito had these connections with the Brits at least since the time of the Second World War, because he received a lot of secret information from the British intelligence through different agents for the movements of the Croatian, Bulgarian and German troops. So basically, the Brits were dealing with the intelligence.

Well, yes. Well, the Brits were totally responsible for the massacre that happened in Blyborg for the Croat that surrendered. So there you have it, too, that connection, definitely.

Yeah. And Tito actually was saved. Basically, his wife was saved because Adolf Hitler ordered Otto Skorzeny.

So basically, the chief of the German commandos to basically take the head of Tito. And this information leaked somehow. I don't know, maybe from the broken Enigma machine or maybe that was some kind of spy.

And literally, literally, the British spy managed to save the life of Tito for, I don't know, the German commandos were there after 30 minutes when he was gone at that time. But basically, the Brits saved the life of Tito. So this is another connection.

And of course, the role of Yugoslavia was like a mediator between the East and the West.

Yeah. Yeah.

The third wave. Yeah. Yeah.

So this was... Third World Alliance, exactly. This is a thing. And Tito, it's interesting because basically, even though he was a Croatian, supposedly, he actually suppressed Croatian nationalism in favor of... The worst of the worst.

Yeah. And he suppressed the Croatian nationalism in favor of great Serbian nationalism, actually. Exactly.

This is the thing that he was pushing in Macedonia, since I was interested there. He wanted eventually, this was his initial plan to basically to create this nation, Macedonian nation on a quite fake basis, because he was afraid that if Bulgaria joined Yugoslavia, they will take the upper hand in this alliance. Right.

And he didn't want Bulgaria to take the upper hand. And he didn't want Croatia to take. So basically, he was balancing using this creation of this fake identity for Macedonians.

And he was supporting the Serbian nationalism. And what you told me is that the Bosniaks were quite comfortable there. So wait a second.

But also the Macedonians as well. I agree. So yeah, this is the thing.

Wait a second, because Dungard was kicked out of the conversation. I don't know why. So yeah, this is what I can say about the creation of Yugoslavia.

It was successful because of the... Wait a second. Wait a second. I'll try to find the link.

Strange. Can you... Interesting. So basically, this is my opinion on Tito.

It was not a based rule or something like that. He was just a double agent from the get-go. Yes, of course.

And he suppressed the national, which is the normal thing, the national feelings of Croatians, of Bulgarians. He created this strange identity of Macedonians. And it looks like he supported the Muslims, the Bosniaks.

Yes, that's true. Because like you said, those that were very loyal to Tito's regime were definitely Bosniaks and definitely Serbs. And like you said, Macedonians too.

So yeah, you encapsulated it very well. And I think also, like you said, also the relationship with Britain is very important to take into consideration because we encountered one of the heinous massacres during post-war, when the war ended. This needs to be when the Croats, Ustasa, laid down their weapons and so on.

And they were handed over to Tito's partisans and absolutely slaughtered in this Austrian city. Yeah, and we will never forget this. That's a good point.

This is the same thing like they sent the Bulgarian Waffen-SS that defended Vienna. They were given to, not to Bulgarians, but to Yugoslavian partisans that... Yeah, they were quite brutal. And interestingly enough, the Bulgarian SS were never in Yugoslavia.

They were formed in what is now Austria. So why they were sent to the Yugoslavia? And they were sadists. These guys were sadists from what I've read.

I mean, gouging eyes, castrating people. Yeah, typical death kind of a torture pattern. Yeah, I agree.

And this was, I mean, a trend during this homeland war. Typical, these atrocious, you know, gouging people's eyes, castration and so on, yeah. So, yeah.

I don't know. This is the only thing that I can see from the whole thing, is that the Serbs are supported by the Russian online trolls. That's why they have so strong position.

Because Serbia, like a population is not... What is the population of Serbia? Around six million, I believe? Yeah, six million. Yeah, somewhere around six million. What is the Serbian diaspora? Maybe a million? Maybe, maybe a million.

It's not even more now during when the country, I mean, has had such a brain drain, you know, especially during the homeland war. So maybe even more now. So my suspicion is that it's obviously, it's not enough to influence so heavily the internet and the opinions of the nationalists.

I think it's, sorry to cut you off, but I just wanted to say, I think it's very dangerous because it leads to that you automatically are in favor of a greater Russia. I mean, and this can cause a huge turmoil, not only in the Balkans, but the entire Central and Eastern Europe. So... Of course.

Yeah, so I just don't find it because my fears are that they could easily flip over Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. And then all of a sudden the Western powers are paralyzed like they were during Obama era in Ukraine. Nothing happened with those sanctions, nothing.

Russia is tied into the financial hub and it was business as usual for all those big finance like BlackRock International, Goldman Sachs. They're all situated in Moscow. So I don't know what's based with Moscow and Russia.

I just don't... Also, look at the position of Germany. I mean, Germans are receiving gas from Russia. And this will throw, and this is important for the German economy.

So they're dependent on the Russian gas. Yeah, with the Nord Stream. Yes, and that's exactly like you said, when it comes to the energy supply, it's extremely... They put themselves in a dangerous position.

And like I've said during the show, Germany is a perfect example to understand what's going on. But they're under... They're carved up, you know, between the Western powers and the ally that is, and also with Russia. So they want to simply carve up Germany and keep it still, not to make it as a political unit that is a power to be reckoned with.

Both the West and the East, they want to just maybe as an economic engine to support the European Union. That's it. Yeah, yeah.

So this is... Well, maybe we must give the... I mean, the problem with the European Union is that we are lacking natural resources. Exactly. And because the European Union, spiritually, is a production of anti-white, anti-European elite.

Oh, of course. You have the Kalergi element. He was, you know, one of the absolutely ideologues behind the concept of the European Union.

So what the hell is this? It's nothing good. I think eventually it will disintegrate. It must, you know.

However, who will fill in the void? I would love to see, for instance, if it would disintegrate, if Germany would take on a political position too. I think that would be the most ideal situation. But the powers that be are very keen on, you know, suffocating Germany, at least in a political sense.

And also flood them in with all those migrants that are coming over. So it will become a schizophrenic nation torn apart. And that's the biggest danger.

Yeah, yeah. However, I think the problem lays in, it's not whether, oh, you know, we should support, you know, US hegemony, or if we should support the greater Russia. That is not the issue.

The issue is that Germany needs to liberate themselves, you know, from the tentacles of these powers that have suffocated it for such a long time. With this, you know, post-war legal framework. And this is still ongoing.

You know, so this is the biggest problem. But also I have a thing that is quite surprising for me. There are a group of Germans that consider themselves nationalists, but they sympathize with Russia.

Which is, I don't know. That's worrisome too. I agree.

I don't understand. I'm talking with both Americans and with the German nationalists. And I'm telling you, I can understand the Russians to some degree, of course, because Russia is kind of, they're on their own.

I mean, they don't have European mentality, really. I mean, not the people, their ruling class. The people, it depends on the people.

Their ruling class are neo-Bolsheviks, like you said. However, they're operating under a civil nationalist banner where they now preach economic liberalism. In the past, they preached like planned economies.

So that's basically the ruling elite. And their mindset is like similar like the US has. Like with US exceptionalism, they view it from a different angle.

Russian exceptionalism, you know? So we see two heterogeneous empires compete for power and influence. However, internally, they're torn apart. And the same goes for Russia.

And the same goes for the United States. It's as simple as that. Yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah.

So we have to be critical if it's influenced from the East or the West. We have to be critical and look after what is best for our interests. And these Nazbols, they're totally naive.

Absolutely, Nazbols. I mean, first of all, the Russian elite, I'm not sure how Russian the Russian elite is because basically they're acting anti-ethnically Russian. They're against the ethnic Russians.

Let's put it that way. They're supporting all these Muslims from Central Asia. They're supporting Caucasian or whatever they are.

Yeah, the biggest inauguration that they had was the biggest mosque restored in Chechnya, for instance. That's only one aspect out of it. Then look at the opening of the borders, you know, with this workload of people from, let's say, Central Asia and Tyre and so on.

And also with the Chinese migrants also in Siberia and so on. So they're totally ethnically diverse. So I just, yeah, it's too bad for them.

I would wish for, and I believe that the Russians themselves must choose a path. Will they embark on this imperialist path with the great Russian empire intersecting the West and the East? Or are they willing to look after their own interests and just topple this old Bolshevik in power who has soon, he will be more empowered than Stalin was, you know? Yeah, yeah, absolutely. This is the thing with the nations.

The states were created, the nationalists. Dugin had a statement that the nations were just a product of modernity and they must be, basically, they must embrace the natural state, which is the empire, like, of course, the Russian empire, which is the inherited model of the Byzantium empire. And you know, and this is also very important, the Russian empire is only possible if they have an alliance with the Chinese.

And this alliance will just destroy Russians too. It will not help them. I mean, it might actually call them in a turmoil at this very moment, some kind of geopolitical conflict that they might actually lose if they do anything stupid with the Chinese.

So the best would be if somehow they would drift apart, you know, the Chinese and the Russians. Well, then all of a sudden Russia will not pose any kind of security threat whatsoever. It's only under the guidance of the Chinese.

And any thoughts on this from your side? I will give the word from Sigurd and Dungard a little bit because we were talking for a very long period of time. In my opinion on this topic, I think that the Jews are just using Russia and China as like a foil that they can play off against the United States and then they can foment a third world war. And then when they do that, they can just get the US to win.

And then the US will be the new Jerusalem where they can mix everybody together as their slave class. And it could also be, it could go the other way around, that the United States crumbles from within. And this gives a larger space for, let's say, the Chinese to fill in the void.

Because if you look at the Chinese policy makers, of course, they're very benign towards these Semites. And especially they're integrated into this Wall Street club as well, despite the fact that it's a communist country that is, which is quite bizarre. Nevertheless, however, it could also go in this way that the US falls and that the Chinese fill in this void.

And then it's... That way they can overplay both sides. Yeah, exactly. So they win each other way because they have the kosher, conservative, Zionist, Christian, right-wing idiots in the United States on their side.

And then they can just blame everything on China and the so-called liberals. And then they can create a false association between what they call liberalism and the Chinese. And then they can use that to play off against the right-wing conservatard, Donald Trump types.

But you have to understand also that China, they have directly said that Israel will play a much larger role in the Silk Road project that they're initiating, the Chinese. So, yeah. And we already see this that, for instance, Israel, that is a tiny state in comparison to the other great powers, is able to maximize its interest by using both Russia, China, and the US, naturally.

So, I mean, I just see... Go ahead. It does seem that it's almost a certainty that the US will undergo a civil war. And that's exactly what they're creating deliberately.

You know, they've got in Canada Trudeau. And before that in the States, they had Obama. And that's basically the left wing that they play off against the right wing.

It's just a dialectic. You know, every four to eight years, they've got a right wing, and then they switch it for a left wing and so forth. And then they do it slightly differently in every Western country.

Australia, Canada, whatever, all the Western European countries. And then people are deceived by that. They don't understand what's going on.

But yeah, obviously, that way they can create the sort of scissor effect, as you said, or the pincer technique, whatever you want to call that, like two stones and a millstone, or they grind the white race down into a powder, or left wing, right wing, and then they get them to fight against one another. You know, because with China becoming an economic power, it will automatically mean a lot for us. Just look at for these last 20 years with outsourcing of jobs, for instance, controlling the entire supply chain for China.

It has put us also in a very bad position. And these Wall Street individuals or these oligarch families, they're only keen on making, they go out with it openly. Well, China, it's history's time for China to become an economic power, to set the conditions and so on.

So I just don't understand either how these Nazbols can somehow cheer for Chinese power. I mean, I'm just very surprised of this. It looks like that the Russians are controlling the narrative in the nationalist circle, or somehow in America and in Europe.

And this is frightening, frightening. I mean, why support? I mean, it's kind of interesting how the, let's say, the foreign policy discourse, both within the right wing circles and left wing circles are intersecting in that sense, like by cheering on for Venezuela or Iran, you know, or North Korea or China. Like that will bring us something good.

I just don't see that either whatsoever. I mean, my main interest is that I'm looking for some kind of regional perspective on how the Europe should survive. That's my main concern at this moment.

I have an idea which is connected with, basically, it's not my original idea. The Poles get this idea of creating this belt around Russia. And basically, we on the Balkans must be on the southern flank, southern wing of this belt.

And there must be on the northern wing must be basically the Baltic states. So we must isolate the Russians. The problem, what I can see is that there was this animosity between the Poles and the Germans, which is mostly unfortunate.

And I also see some good signs from France, which kind of we forgot about the French that they had some kind of nationalism. At least their elite, these ex generals and officers, they're showing some signs of awakening. I don't know how, but it's interesting what happened there.

That's why I'm trying to establish connection with these French nationalists that actually live in Bulgaria. They established some kind of colony here. Because I'm quoting one of the leaders.

He said that he's afraid for the future of his daughters being surrounded. He lived previously in Paris, being surrounded by so many non-whites. So yeah, I mean, this is my idea.

We must establish these national states surrounding Russia and somehow manage to establish independent logistic lines, like independent from the Russians, independent from the Turks and independent from the Americans. That's true. We shouldn't look at Washington or Moscow.

We should focus on, let's say, a full real integration of Europe, not based on this bullshit bureaucratic pedophile system in Brussels. Yeah. Now, between Brussels and Washington and Moscow, I will choose Berlin, honestly.

Yeah, the same. Yeah, I choose that too. But when I say Berlin, I'm from the national Germany, not from this thing that is created.

But how this will happen, I don't know. Maybe some of the Eastern Germans and the Southern Germans are a little bit more conservative, maybe because of the influence of the religion still, especially in South Germany. In Bavaria, yeah.

In Bavaria, yeah. But, and also the Eastern Germans are considerably more conservative and pro, how to say, nationalistic than the Western Germans. This was shown in several cases with these refugees.

They were not very welcomed in Eastern Germany. Exactly, that is true. The thing is that, I don't know, I don't know.

The problem is the resources. We have, the Europeans have the technology still. The problem is the resources.

Because most of the resources are coming from Middle East, from Russia and from Africa. But we can easily take, I mean, if the entire Europe, I mean, we could find the resources in the Central and Eastern Europe, no problem. And with the Western technology, we could easily isolate ourselves and survive without any kind of necessity from these other countries.

It's just a globalist scheme, I would say. Yeah, yeah, yeah. You're right.

You're right. We have the agriculture. We can provide for food.

We have the energy supplies. We have the clean water. I mean, in comparison, so yes.

Basically, basically, yeah. And also, I must say that as in that case, not only Europe, but also we must support the diasporic population, European diasporic population in Africa too. That's why I... Yeah, that's 100% true what you said.

To look into this, yeah, we should not leave that out. A good point. Very good point.

Because Europe, they'll be left on the mercies of the Africans there. And we already see how that went. Yeah, yeah, yeah.

This is the thing. So my suspicion is that if there was a nationalist, how to say, regime change in Europe, in the major countries, basically we need France and Germany to be turned nationalistic. This will be enough for the rest of Europe, I think.

Exactly. Maybe eventually Poland. This also could be said, but that type of nationalism is very civic nationalism or pro-kind of pan-Slavic.

They had their variant of pan-Slavic nationalism. And it's a little bit too Christian for my taste. Yeah, yeah, yeah, yeah.

This is also a thing. And you know more about the Poles. I have a very vague idea what is going on in Poland.

Maybe also Dugard could tell a little bit about Poland, because he also had some experience there. But my concern is basically that these inner rivalries between the European nations could end in a total disaster. Because nationalism had a bad rap, because we are always, when you have a nationalistic government, they're always looking at taking one from the neighbors and starting some war.

Now the problem is global. We are threatened by total destruction and annihilation. Our genes, our culture, our civilization, everything will be destroyed.

So basically the other variant that I see, and the Americans, at least the group that I'm part of, are talking about a total restart, like collapse of the civilization, of the white civilization, trying to establish a new type of civilization based on this Indo-European area, maybe for Aryan, they won't bother us with all of those, Aryan values that we forgot back in the time. So this is also a variant, but the problem is that you can... Yeah, if you're a flatline, look, it might flatline the entire world economy. I mean, if we would do that.

But I see where you're coming from. Some kind of a disintegration or partitioning of the country in different types of enclaves, so they can sustain some kind of a coexistence. I think, yes, maybe it will lead to that, depending on the internal strife in the US.

I have this idea that America, white America, this is totally hypothetical, of course, if white nationalists, racially aware nationalists, took power in America, or at least in part of America, we can use the Americans, like this special group that we are not mentioning, use the Russians, like this global power that is spreading their interests. This is just hypothetical, but still the dominant force, to this moment at least, the dominant force in the world is the American Navy and the American Air Force. They are the dominant force.

I will quote again and again what I've read in the official Russian media. They are afraid of the American naval and air power, the Russians and the Chinese combined. They are developing weapons in that direction to negate that, but maybe the Americans still have advantage, maybe a decade advantage.

Yeah, I believe so too, depending on how the nuclear armament goes with the testing and so on. I don't think that the Russian and Chinese want to use their nuclear arsenal, really. I don't believe so either, but it's a deterrent at least.

The only people that I'm pretty sure that they want to use their nuclear arsenal in a very, very final solution, so to say, is Israel. It depends on the option. Yes, that could be.

So, Doom, are you there? Yes. So, what do you think about the whole situation with the racial tension in America and eventually America like a platform for establishing a white world, so to say? Well, you know, America is like... What phrase do we use here? So much potential. That's kind of like a doomed phrase that we use.

It's like a phrase of regret. It had so much potential. It wasn't actualized.

But as far as the racial problems of America, they're getting pretty shockingly bad. I mean, it's shockingly bad in terms of numbers or social statistics, but it's also kind of like it's created a psychological malaise that people suffer from. And it just really kind of makes them stupid and pathetic, in my opinion, like the way I look at them, the way I see them.

They just seem really subdued by this or driven crazy in some way. It's made them dysfunctional in some way. You know, the white people in America are just really, really depressed, really stupid, really lazy and cowardly.

Like they're really scared of their own fucking shadow. They cannot tell anyone off. They can't tell anyone what they need to hear.

They're scared to assert themselves. That's so sad that they've reached to that point. I mean, they have no serious opinions or no opinions that weren't given to them by somebody else.

And they're the most milquetoast opinions. Like basically in America, if you have any opinion that you at least partially came to the conclusion yourself, you at least partially formed it yourself or got it from some non-mainstream source, then pretty much by default, you're some kind of neo-Nazi or white nationalist. Like that's about the only alternative to the mainstream fag culture.

So, you know, it's just kind of, everything is just really, it's just kind of bad in terms of America. I mean, the blacks are mouthy and arrogant. They're insanely insolent, like so insolent, you couldn't imagine that someone could get away with acting like that in their life.

You know, I mean, obviously in a natural setting, like in a natural context, something would be done to correct a person like that. They'd be shown that this is not about you. No, no, everything is not about you.

In fact, objectively speaking, almost nothing is about you. Unless you're causing trouble and making it about you, in which case you need to be punished. And basically all blacks in America need to be punished for something, but it's not happening because white people are a bunch of cowards.

So it's just the culmination of like decades and decades and really like centuries at this point. Yeah, indoctrination that has gone to way beyond. Yeah, I understand totally.

It's centuries of bullshit memes have ruined this country. So it's becoming a real fucking problem. Like I know you're probably tired of hearing this stuff and you don't like hearing me talk about it again, but it's really the truth.

Like this country is fucked up mentally. Like conservatives here in America, they're as bad as the goddamn liberals almost. Like they're pretty close.

They're worse in some ways because the way that they think is just ridiculous. It's ridiculous. There's no excuse for thinking and acting that way.

It's ridiculous. Like I can't believe that you would think at any point, like I don't know how the fuck you'd be so stupid to think that this kind of racial oppression, this kind of racial submission is warranted or justifiable at all. And it's like my dad said this recently.

He's like, I don't know how people are so fucked up that they can't realize at this point who the actual underdog is in this situation. Like Americans are really stupid and that they don't understand when somebody is actually the underdog who is legitimately being oppressed and legitimately being mistreated and legitimately being marginalized. They can't recognize that because instead their attention has been shifted over to this other group that they're told as being mistreated or has gone through some turbulent past.

When in reality, it was either a justifiable consequence of their own actions or it was just their justifiable station in life just based on who and what they are and how they naturally act. How they still act now today, the way that they still are now, they're still this way. You know, so essentially Americans have no judgment.

Like Americans have no sense of justice. They can't understand how things should be. They need to be that way.

That's the way they are. It's not something that you can change. Your input doesn't make it different.

It does not change because of the way you think or feel about it. It's that way. That is it.

So Americans are just like insanely superstitious. They're not very religious anymore. They're not very religious, but they are superstitious.

They're superstitious. They believe in a lot of stupid ideas that have no basis in reality at all. You cannot look at anything in the real world and justify believing this at all.

At all. You can't. I understand.

And it's shocking. And I see this pattern too. I mean, definitely.

However, do you see any viable alternative that could change this? I mean, in the future, maybe, or somehow, some kind of prediction of what might actually, you know, revert this devastating trend that is ongoing? I mean, the good thing, I think, is that it could potentially snap at any moment. Like, I think that it's so flimsy. The narrative is so flimsy that it's essentially crumbling.

I think it could easily break. But the thing is, it's like, I mean, sure, it's a paper tiger, but you still need like a breeze to knock it over. And we don't have that really.

You know, I mean, I have some friends that were hanging out with Patriot Front and they went to Philadelphia and they had like 150 guys marching through the center of Philadelphia. And so they went carrying the flags and carrying the shields through Philadelphia and had their march and all that. And I don't think they really said anything too controversial, really.

But there were some howling primitives and, you know, some people went out and were screaming at them and started assaulting them. But they still made their way all across the route that they had planned. They made their way through.

And then they got in their trucks and took off. And I guess the cops stopped them and the cops were harassing them, but they didn't find any weapons on them and they didn't find anything that they could legally charge them with, really. So then the cops let them go.

I don't think, according to my friend, no one actually got caught on anything. Like nobody went to jail. So they went and did that.

And the media outlets immediately tried to take control of it and say, well, they were outnumbered and chased out of Philadelphia and there was a counter-protest that was way bigger and more successful. But they weren't really, though. And then after a couple days, they dropped it.

Like after two or three days, they just did not mention it at all. Just disappeared it. Which is what they typically do with Patriot Front stuff.

They just pretend it's not happening. But Patriot Front is about the only respectable group that does anything that makes them visible in the street. Any kind of activity, yeah.

So since Charlottesville, they've just shut down the visibility of anything that young white men are doing. Exactly. It was a huge crackdown after Charlottesville.

Like you said, it was a huge crackdown. When FBI is involved and everything. Under this constant, under this scope, yeah.

Yeah. So the point is, it's like you cannot make a scene and you cannot spread a message to change people's minds. And also it's futile to try and change the minds of... Like I can't understand the idea of having... I mean, we just had an election that was probably the most fraudulent election in the history of this country.

I mean, that's not to say that other elections were not fraudulent. But this one was the most, like the most obviously fake election that we probably had in the country. And the most ridiculous shenanigans involved with the election in probably the history of this country.

Okay. So the whole, the entire line of thinking that you change things by elections is as discredited as it can be in this country. Like I would think it can't be any stupider at this point to think that democratic, that democratic change is either feasible or desirable because Trump demonstrated this perfectly.

I was just reading an article about Trump. I mean, it was written by... There's some new book coming out written by some guy called Wolf. He's a special person called Wolf with two Fs.

And he's writing this book about Trump, which is obviously just a slew of bullshit. It's a book claiming that actually the Democrats legitimately won the election. That's like the thrust of the book.

So he has a bunch of completely unsubstantiated rumors about Trump and things he supposedly said and supposedly did, but there's no video or audio evidence. They've been doing this for years, claiming that Trump said this, claiming that Trump said that. No video, no audio, nothing.

But they claim that Trump was saying something about Hitler in this book. They put it in the book. They also put it in the book that he was furious and throwing a fit at the attorney generals.

He was trying to get judges across the country to investigate the election, and they all refused. They completely ignored his request. They refused to investigate it, including A.G. Barr.

Barr refused to investigate it at all. He just publicly stated, oh, we don't have any evidence of significant election fraud that would have possibly affected the election, and then he resigned two weeks later. So he apparently ordered them to do their job, and they refused to do their job.

So that right there should tell you, like, Trump, honestly, in my opinion, Trump was not even, like, he's not even a good guy. He's not even a person that we would want in power. Like, he's not a person who has a realistic and positive way forward for this country and for the people of this country, which is obviously white people.

You know, he's just too, he's too soft. He was too soft, and maybe the reason why he was too soft is because even if you have a guy giving the right orders, the orders will not be obeyed because these people are just, these people are cowards or they're bought and paid for or they're getting money from special interest groups. So they're too cowardly or they're on the enemy team is the thing.

They're on the enemy side, okay? Like, we've had a hundred, we've had a hundred fucking years of subversion in this country. Look, they have already got the people in the positions that they want them in to make sure that nothing ever happens, that we never get to change anything, that we never have a government that reflects the actual culture or the actual racial, the actual racial stock in the country. You're thinking that, exactly, exactly.

So what I'm saying is like, I mean, we're just kind of in a standstill, you know, like individual actions, no matter how extreme or no matter how shocking, they're not enough to do anything. As an individual, you can't really do it. And then on top of that, to rile up the non-whites by getting them to just act up.

Well, they are. Yeah, but doing it even more, just all at once, all over the country or something like that, just, you know, do some sensationalistic activity and then they can go and cause more crazy mayhem. I mean, that's probably what's going to happen after the Patriot Front rally at Philadelphia.

I mean, it could easily have happened there. I mean, probably Philadelphia. I mean, it would be hard to tell in cities like Philadelphia whether or not the normal crime rate was elevated because it's already insanely high.

But just over the 4th of July weekend, we had like 150 people get shot and killed in this country, you know, like 150 gang-related shootings. And it's like, and it's all blacks doing it. That's the thing.

We do have, nowadays in America, we do have a lot of gun violence and we do have a lot of crime. It's all the blacks doing it. Like, that's just the way it is.

Baltimore and so on, yeah. Yeah, that's just the way it is, you know. And what you said, what Sigurd said earlier about the non-whites being armed and given weaponry to go and cause chaos.

I mean, that's the way it is in America. It's already that way. There was a video of a shooting in Philadelphia where there's these two Africans that walk up across the street corner.

They see two other Africans and they start shooting at them. And you can clearly tell from the audio, you can tell that the bullets, the amount of bullets they're shooting, that these are clearly fully automatic weapons they're using. So they're using totally illegal weapons and obviously they should not legally be allowed to have the weapons, but they're just spraying hundreds of bullets in a matter of a few seconds.

So it's obviously a fully automatic weapon that they've got. I think they're doing that so that they can justify gun grabbing from the legal white owners. Exactly.

Well, whatever, I mean, sure. Yeah, that's where it will obviously go. But the point is the Africans will still have fully automatic weapons and they will still be using them.

That's the reality of this country. Gentlemen, I don't mean to cut you off, but I must go now. It was really a pleasure to be on this podcast.

And I hope that you guys will check my channel, you know, and we can do more of these shows. I definitely want to do more shows with you. Thank you.

Thank you, Rudolf. Thank you. And I can continue with Patrick.

How are you, Patrick? Goodbye, Rudolf. I'll be happy to make another podcast when you're free. Whenever you want, guys.

Just, you know, keep in touch and we will do that again. This was highly, highly interesting. Another question.

Another question. England or Italy? I hope that Italy takes it and that they will break the back of LGBTQ Britain now. No one likes the Brits.

No one. British cocks. Yeah.

Okay. Okay. So, Patrick? He must be still doing the preparations.

I don't know. Must be getting some drinks in hand for this. So I guess you should cut it then if you're going to do another show after that.

Maybe. Maybe I'm free. So we can make another show.

It will be.
